In recent years, due to relative political stability and the formation of various economic communities such as Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), The Common Market for Eastern and Southern Africa (COMESA), Southern African Customs Union (SACU) and now the African Continental Free Trade Area (AfCFTA), the growth of economic development has accelerated in many nations. This is especially important for India as after China, it is the largest trading partner of African continent.

Many of the countries have huge natural resources and are now undergoing fast industrialisation and construction of national and regional infrastructure.
