Creativity and innovation are becoming increasingly important for the development of the 21st century. They contribute to economic prosperity as well as to social and individual wellbeing and are essential factors for a more competitive and dynamic world. Education is seen as central in fostering creative and innovative skills.

Creative learning can be seen as a form of learning that favours understanding over memorisation. Hence any learning that does not imply mere content acquisition entails a component of creativity. Creative learning requires innovative teaching. Innovative teaching is both the practice of teaching for creativity and of applying innovation to teaching. Both aspects call for an educational culture which values creativity and sees it as an asset in the classroom. Teachers are key figures in constructing a creative climate, but they need support from both policymakers and institutions.

Right from when the child enters a preschool at the age of 3 till he completes his graduation, creativity from the teachers play an important role in his life. The child's perspective to view the world changes which helps him to become more confident and self competent.
